CELEBRATING THE PAST INVESTING IN THE FUTURE

The Principal and Fellows of Somerville College extend their most sincere thanks to the donors listed in this report for their generous support of the College in 2012-13.

Every gift received makes a difference – 1,269 of you supported Somerville with restricted and unrestricted gifts from 01.08.12 – 31.07.13.

FROM THE PRINCIPAL DR ALICE PROCHASKA

Encouraged by the recent generosity of our alumni, we will strive continually to offer Somerville students the highest quality teaching, the best facilities and support, and opportunities to excel in every imaginable field of endeavour.

The annual round of Principal's meetings with students is in progress as this report goes to press. I am always impressed by the enormous diversity of activities they engage in, the places they travel to, and above all their sense of civic responsibility. Some work during their summers in communities and hospitals in Africa, while others continue the tradition of support for Molly's Library in Ghana. Many work with Oxford-based charities with prisoners and asylum seekers, or teaching English to children in migrant families, or they staff student organisations like Nightline, supporting students in crisis. Voluntary work is part of the fabric of student lives at Oxford and they in turn need support from their College, whether for travel grants, vacation accommodation or language training. Your generosity both supports their public service and helps them to survive financially during their studies.

Against this background, I am truly delighted to report the success of the £25 million fund-raising campaign launched in 2009. This campaign brought to us the phenomenally successful Radcliffe Observatory buildings that won four architectural prizes and provide sixty-eight rooms which also generate conference income, subsidising our accommodation charges to students. Thanks to your gifts, we have renovated the Wolfson building (including the new Brittain-Williams Room) and created The Terrace, the new social hub and bar which brings to life the under-used space between the Margery Fry and Vaughan buildings, further connecting the undergraduate and postgraduate communities.

Somerville supports both the best possible tutorial teaching and the research excellence of our tutorial fellows. Last year the largest gift yet made by any Somervillian in their life time clinched the campaign to endow our Philosophy Fellowship in perpetuity. Our donor prefers to be anonymous, but we extend our profound thanks to her. We now hope for similarly generous support, for both the French Fellowship and another in the name of Dorothy Hodgkin: the fiftieth anniversary of her Nobel Prize falls in 2014.

One especially moving form of fundraising commemorates Somervillians who died in tragic circumstances. The families and friends of Michala Butterfield (nee Emmett, Law, d. 2008) and Jonathan Roberts (History, d. 2011) have achieved amazing feats to commemorate these two short but cherished lives with bursaries for future students. There are always new needs, not least with tuition fees almost trebling in 2012. Our next focus is on supporting students and fellows through endowed posts and targeted financial assistance. This year we welcomed our first three Indira Gandhi Scholars, funded by a grant of £3 million from the Government of India and a 40% match from the University's Postgraduate Studentship Fund. Now we need to anchor the Indira Gandhi Centre for Sustainable Development (IGC) in a building on the ROQ site that will provide teaching and lecturing facilities and postgraduate accommodation. The centre looks back to Indian Somervillians, beginning with Cornelia Sorabji (1889), India's first female lawyer, and has an exciting future as the focal point for India Studies in Oxford.

The death of Baroness Margaret Thatcher in April 2013 accelerated a campaign which she supported, to create scholarships in her name for undergraduate and postgraduate students from all over the world, regardless of nationality, social background and religious or political belief. As a financially-challenged undergraduate, Lady Thatcher herself received help from Somerville, and many present and future students will face a similar need. We are seeking significant international donations for scholarships and endowed fellowships; and a personal development programme will support travel and training.

Our student Prospectus, issued in September 2013, is entitled A Place to Excel. That is an aspiration for both the College and individual Somervillians. We thank all our donors, from the bottom of our hearts, for helping us surmount some pressing needs and supporting us so magnificently. Encouraged by all of you, we will strive continually to offer Somerville students the highest quality teaching, the best facilities and support, and opportunities to excel in every imaginable field of endeavour.

DEVELOPMENT DIRECTOR'S REPORT

SARA KALIM

It has been an inspiring and privileged experience for me as an alumna to return to serve the College and to begin to get to know the thousands of you who continue to care so greatly and generously for the advancement of Somerville.

It is for me a source of pride that Somerville, which was established with a pioneering spirit, and built with an unswerving commitment to excellence and to service within a culture of tolerance, has been able both to preserve its core values and to retain its high ambition. As you will have read in the Principal's introduction, it is a remarkable achievement that this year we have hit the £25 million campaign target we set in 2009. Somervillian alumni and friends rose to this considerable challenge with customary style and with exceptional loyalty. This is a landmark moment for us as a community, and it has required huge amounts of energy from all those who have worked as volunteers and supporters since the campaign's inception. We cannot thank you enough for helping us to reach this goal. You can read more about where these funds have been allocated on the pages that follow.

Celebrations are certainly in order, but I want to assure you that our work to secure Somerville's future will not abate. Nor can it afford to, given the international economic climate and pressures on state funding of education. We must continue to support excellent students regardless of their financial means, to underwrite the tutorial system that has benefited so many, and to maintain the historic buildings that enable these things to continue. All these endeavours come at a price.

Looking ahead, our first focus will be the Annual Fund, which many of you have contributed to, and which helps us to deliver the essential services of a world-class educational institution. We would love to widen alumni participation in supporting the College's fundamental work through this fund.

In 2012-13, around 18% of alumni were engaged in philanthropic support of the College, quite a good rate by traditional Oxbridge College standards. However, we will need to raise this figure if we are to keep up with the current and growing costs. I became a regular donor to College this year and am now an evangelist about the power of regular giving at whatever level alumni and friends can offer. There is no such thing as a donation that is unappreciated, useless, or too small!

Another priority for the upcoming year will be to strengthen our work on legacy and planned giving, which have been especially important in supporting teaching and helping to endow tutorial fellowships. By providing alumni with the most up-to-date information about supporting the College through planned giving, we hope to encourage more people to make what is often the most permanent and transforming gift of their lives. Hearteningly, several of you have told us of your plans to make a bequest to Somerville. To support such generosity, we will be establishing a Legacy Society with an annual social gathering.

"This is a landmark moment for us as a community, and it has required huge amounts of energy from all those who have worked as volunteers and supporters since the campaign's inception."

We also wish to take full advantage of the matched funding schemes that are available to us from the wider University. The Oxford Teaching Fund and the Oxford Graduate Student Matched Fund each offer us a splendid opportunity to fund-raise for both postgraduate support and for fellowships, knowing that your donations will be matched at a 60:40 ratio. We are grateful for all your donations thus far towards the French Fellowship at Somerville, which will help us to reach our target of £1.2 million, thereby unlocking the matched funds.

Somerville, never a college to shirk a challenge, continues to raise its game with two major new campaigns which will bring different dimensions to our activity and to our profile and which serve to allow us to continue what we do best: providing a place to excel. Establishing the Indira Gandhi Centre for Sustainable Development gives us many wonderful opportunities: to develop exceptional Indian postgraduate students who could otherwise not afford to be here, and to develop inter-disciplinary research on critical sustainability issues facing India and the wider world (food/water security, the environment, the socio-economic role of women, to name but three). Since this is a Centre so focused on global issues, we are seeking funding support from our alumni and from further afield as well. Any help you can offer the IGC – giving, publicity, introductions – would be gratefully received.

Our other initiative, creating Thatcher Scholarships at Somerville, will be a major endeavour with substantial rewards for student support. The scheme will fund undergraduate and postgraduate students from the UK and abroad, allowing candidates, whom we select on merit, to thrive at Oxford regardless of financial means.

I would like to take this opportunity to express special thanks to the distinguished members of our Development Board whose leadership contributions and strategic expertise continue to help us to raise our game and our ambitions for the College and its members. This year has seen a number of new board members appointed who are bringing their own creativity along with their unique viewpoints and experience to our thinking. This group is a real tour de force and we are endlessly grateful for their support.

Thanks are also extended to all of our alumni volunteers across the world. They continue to bring welcome outreach for the development of the College. We must also thank the exceptional members of the Somerville Development Office who do such sterling work and make that work so enjoyable at the same time. We feel fortunate that you have chosen Somerville as a cause you care about because you want to be a catalyst for change. Your support and engagement are making a real difference to the lives of students and faculty whose work and research make a positive contribution to the world.

I hope you enjoy reading about how your generosity continues to be transformational for the lives of others.

On behalf of the College, I offer you our enormous gratitude and appreciation for your encouragement, belief and support. We look forward to continuing with you on this journey to secure and develop Somerville's future.

Looking to the future: opportunities for matched funding

We would like to offer our enthusiastic thanks to Moira Black (Chemistry, 1968) who this year decided to become our first “matched funder” for the Somerville Annual Fund in 2013. This meant that she, along with a group of other alumni encouraged by her initiative, offered to match the first gifts pledged to the College during the 2013 Telethon. The result was that we raised an additional, unrestricted £20,000 to boost new regular giving! These regular gifts are a wonderful support to the College's ability to plan for the future and we are very grateful to this year's matched funders for their generosity, their resourcefulness and their commitment to Somerville's success.

Fundraising for Somerville is very much a community enterprise and a large number of people in a range of different financial circumstances give to the College to support its key costs of student support, teaching, and buildings. Matched funding, however, provides a specific opportunity to make an added impact in the College, as your gift will strongly encourage fellow alumni to participate, knowing that their efforts will be matched.

We are delighted by the success of the venture and we would love to encourage other alumni who feel able to play a leading role in our fundraising to consider the option of “matched giving”. There are opportunities for matched giving at the postgraduate scholarship level and also for tutorial fellowships through a number of University schemes. Matched giving is a great way to leverage your donations and to make every penny count! Please do contact us if you want to know more.

Upward momentum: Somerville students celebrating graduation, September 2013

Transforming Lives: Bursaries at Somerville: Louis Fletcher

Louis Fletcher, who recently completed a Masters of Studies in English on a Somerville Alumni scholarship, has been working as the College Access Officer, but is soon set to depart Somerville. Neither of his parents attended university and he would never have considered Oxford were it not for a 'Gifted and Talented' school trip. He says he was inclined to go to a less intimidating institution closer to home in the east Midlands. "But once I'd decided to continue my studies at a higher level, there was no question of where I wanted to study – or which College!" Louis says he enjoyed the liberal, progressive and open values of the College, as well as the people (students and fellows). As for whether he settled into his studies as an undergraduate, his first-class degree provides the answer. Looking to the future, first impressions are that a humanities degree does translate well into the job market. "It's clear from talking to various employers that a Humanities degree from Oxford does indeed make me that wonderful thing: employable. This is reassuring – particularly for my parents!"

THE SOMERVILLE CAMPAIGN

It is with enormous pleasure that we are able to announce completion of the Somerville Campaign launched by the College in June 2009.

The College's first major fundraising campaign was an opportunity to celebrate and sustain the Somerville traditions of academic excellence, accessibility for students, and the development of our facilities. The key fundraising streams were:

- Student support
- Fellowships
- Buildings and Facilities

Making the grade

The Campaign's headline target was £25 million and it is with enormous pleasure that we are able to report that this was reached in the summer. Regular giving to the Annual Fund, unrestricted legacies and one-off donations have all contributed to make this achievement possible. Above all, it is the generosity of our alumni that lies behind the Campaign's success.

We wish to take this opportunity to thank you for your generous support over the four years of the Campaign. As you doubtless know, university fees trebled in 2012, meaning Somerville can rely far less on government funding. The risk, of course, is that only the wealthy apply to Oxford. The generosity of our alumni has therefore become even more of a lifeline in ensuring the College can accept students regardless of background or means. Your contributions to the Campaign are enormously appreciated. Thank you so much.

Students, students, students

The gifts made to Somerville in the College's 2012-13 financial year have been generous and represented a wide number of our alumni. Your giving has enabled so much of our core work to go ahead and there is not space here to list the many areas that funding has supported.

A few achievements you have helped to enable, however, are the new Radcliffe Observatory Quarter Buildings that house dozens more students on site (saving them significant Oxford rental fees), necessary repairs to broken boilers in Wolfson, a refurbishment of Somerville's remarkable College Library, support for our distinguished fellows and, of course, bursary funds that support the most deserving students.

Distribution of Campaign income

Type of donation

A dedicated community of donors

When our alumni are generous in their donations, it sends a clear signal to other donors and funding bodies that we are worthy of support. Our participation rates are strong compared to most Oxford Colleges, and our aim is for them to increase.

- 36% of alumni have supported the Campaign overall.
- 18% of alumni made a donation in 2012-13.

Somerville's strong identity and sense of community naturally feed into our funding profile. We now plan to create an Annual Fund Circle, so as to provide a forum for a more regular conversation between the College and its donors to take place. Somerville faces a permanent funding shortfall, equivalent (if we are to cover tuition fees and basic living expenses) to around £7,500 per student per year. This is no mean challenge, but if we can draw a lesson from the Campaign, it is surely that the Somerville alumni remain as committed as ever to their College, and to providing the opportunities to students that they themselves once enjoyed here.

TRANSFORMING LIVES: SOMERVILLE'S INDIRA GANDHI SCHOLARS

Following an agreement signed in May 2013, Somerville College's first three Indira Gandhi scholars arrived in October from India to begin their academic year at the University of Oxford, thanks to the funds provided by the government of India, the University of Oxford and Somerville College.

Sumanas Koulagi, Shriman Narayan Sai Raman and Shahana Munazir will be studying for Master's Degrees as part of the Oxford-India partnership hosted by Somerville College, which enables exceptional students to conduct research and study in the area of sustainable development.

"I chose Oxford because I can study under the top theoreticians and practitioners, which will raise my capacity to work in policy – as well as at grassroots level – to bring positive change in India," said Sumanas Koulagi, who grew up in Melkote, a small town in southern India, and is studying for an MSc in Biodiversity, Conservation and Management.

"My parents and friends are very proud of me, as I grew up in a small town and studied in the local language until tenth grade – and now I am at one of the world's top universities. I have a number of hobbies – bird-watching, organising nature camps for children, reading books and playing cricket, but the only one I am pursuing in Oxford is the reading!"

The Oxford India graduate scholarships have been enabled as a result of funding from the Government of India and from Somerville College and the University of Oxford. The Government of India has generously donated £3 million for scholarships for Indian graduate students and to fund fellowships in sustainable development. The University of Oxford and Somerville College are contributing a further £3 million for scholarships, and to support the programme (through the University of Oxford Graduate Scholarship Matched Fund).

Scholarships are available only for candidates ordinarily resident in India or graduates of universities in India who have been accepted to study at the University of Oxford and can demonstrate exceptional academic ability.

The purpose of the scheme is for the candidates to contribute to the University's research before returning to India as leaders in their own fields. The scholarship scheme gives students significant cross-disciplinary flexibility under the academic umbrella of sustainability.

"I am tremendously fortunate to be here," said Shahana Munazir, who grew up in Patna, capital of Bihar Province in north India, and will be studying for an MSc in Contemporary India. "Oxford will equip me to go back and be of some assistance to my home country. I would like to complete my D. Phil at Oxford and then join the Indian Civil Service, so as to put my theoretical expertise into practice."

Munazir was brought up in a traditional Muslim family where an academic life was not on the usual menu of options, but in the end her family and friends were incredibly happy at the opportunity that had opened up for her. Moreover, Munazir was able, she says, to bring some of her skills with her, among them cooking and music. A graduate in History, she hopes to see something of England's historical heritage during her time at Somerville.

The three students will be based at Somerville College, which will also be home to the Oxford India Centre. The building is scheduled to be completed in 2017, the centenary of Indira Gandhi's birth, and will house the Indira Gandhi Centre for Sustainable Development.

Gandhi, who was assassinated in 1984, was prime minister of India and an alumna of Somerville College. She was also a campaigner for sustainable development long before it had become a major political issue, delivering the seminal speech at the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment.

"Somerville is distinguished by its beauty and by its warm and welcoming environment," said Shriman Sai Raman, who was born in Chennai (formerly Madras), grew up in New Delhi and is studying for an MSc in Water Science, Policy and Management.

Sai Raman, who speaks Tamil, Hindi, English and a little French and Spanish, loves reading, learning about new cultures and playing a range of sports – he has already signed up to row for Somerville and is a member of the Oxford Union. Oxford would not have been possible, he says, without such supportive parents – and his time at Somerville has begun well.

"The intensive course programme, thriving sports, comfortable accommodation and all the food options make for a great life here, even if the weather can take a little getting used to! But the 'city of dreaming spires' only gets more enchanting."

Transforming Lives: Bursaries at Somerville: Kate Travers

Kate Travers was at a sixth form college in Stourbridge when she applied to Oxford along with a friend. At Open Day, she liked the department, but struggled with the Colleges, which seemed intimidating. “I really hated it and had a small freak-out while going round town with a couple of my friends. The freakiest was Magdalen – the lawns, the deer. There were spirals mown into the grass and, well, why do that?! I chose Somerville because, frankly, I walked in and felt a bit more at home and at ease. Plus I really fell for the JCR engagement – they took candidates from local schools on a coach and I wouldn’t have thought about coming if it wasn’t for that.”

Kate took out student loans to help fund her studies (BA Modern Languages) but also received the Oxford Opportunity Bursary, which was paid for by Somerville College and a generous Italian donor.

Penrose, her first home, was stately (despite splinters in the cushions) but living in a student residence was a new experience. “Some people were used to boarding school where they had a room and a place to study but I was used to doing my homework in front of the TV. But I really liked the people I met and found that lots of people were interested in music too. In fact, one girl I met early on turned out to have some shared interests – and I suddenly realised there were people just like me here.”

Kate took French and Latin but her focus was medieval literature, with a more esoteric interest in Occitan literature. “Being taught Dante by Dr Manuele Gagnolati was amazing. He once told me that Dante IS Italian at Oxford as pretty much everyone does it. But they’re really innovative and broad in how they teach it and they push their students to the limits. It’s a great programme.”

Which perhaps goes some way to explaining why Kate is now applying for postgraduate programmes in the US. Where would she hope to be 15 years from now? “Hopefully by then I might have finished a PhD and written a book, or be teaching somewhere – that would be the goal.”

Dr Karen Nielsen inspects John Stuart Mill's personal copy of Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics in the Mill Room at Somerville Library. Mill's personal library, which the College inherited thanks to Mill's connection with Mary Somerville, has its own room in the College Library.

INVESTING IN ACADEMIC EXCELLENCE: ENDOWING FELLOWSHIPS

Dissecting Aristotle

NEW FACES: Dr Karen Margrethe Nielsen, whose appointment was made possible by alumni generosity.

You might think that nobody could question Dr Karen Nielsen's recent appointment as Somerville's Philosophy Fellow. Nielsen, after all, was a Fulbright scholar at Cornell University and completed a PhD on Aristotle's Theory of Decision – a weighty topic and a title which surely invites vacillation.

You would be mistaken, however, or so Nielsen argues. The one man who would surely dispute her appointment (and probably the establishment of Somerville College as well) is her academic quarry himself: Aristotle.

“From his point of view, I'm the worst possible Aristotle tutor – a barbarian woman!”

Classics for 'Barbarians'

Nielsen grew up in Trondheim in Norway, where she first became interested in philosophy and the history of ideas. It was also while at Trondheim's University of Science and Technology that she began to study Classics, soon adding Greek to the mix.

Classics, she says, was already under enormous pressure, as there were merely three or four students of Greek and a sole dedicated lecturer. An increase in student numbers in the early 90s, part of a government attempt in Norway to cut unemployment figures, meant it was possible to go a whole term without a lecture. Pursuing Classics took singular commitment.

It also took her abroad, first to the US to complete a PhD at Cornell University's Sage School of Philosophy under Professor Terry Irwin (now at Keble), and then to Western University in Ontario, where she would work as Assistant Professor in Philosophy from 2005-12 (although with one temporary stint at the University of Cambridge). She was awarded the Somerville Philosophy Fellowship in 2013.

“Oxford's Philosophy faculty has become a lot more international in recent years,” says Nielsen. “There are a wider range of backgrounds represented and a wider range of interests, too. The faculty is increasingly interdisciplinary.”

Oxford undergraduates' first contact with Aristotle is the Ethics, Nielsen's own particular focus, and some then move on to read the Physics. Somerville itself has a rich philosophical heritage too, counting among former fellows both Elizabeth Anscombe and Philippa Foot. How then, aside from the gender issue, might Aristotle have fitted into life at Somerville and Oxford?

“I suspect he would have liked the quad – it's a good place to be a peripatetic philosopher here,” says Nielsen. “But he would have disapproved of the fact that philosophy students no longer have to do the full curriculum in logic!”

“I am thrilled that College has been able to elect Karen Margrethe Nielsen to succeed me as Tutorial Fellow in Philosophy. Our students will benefit hugely from her scholarship and teaching, and we are all most grateful to the Somerville alumni donors whose wonderful generosity has made this possible.”

Lesley Brown, Emeritus Fellow in Philosophy

The science of choosing good

Nielsen's particular focus has been Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics, and her current research looks at the value of human deliberation – a key Aristotelian tenet – and how this might relate to a more determinist view of nature.

“I want to ask: what would Aristotle, who believed the universe was eternal, think of determinism?” says Nielsen. “Does his deliberative approach agree with it? Is it possible to believe in human agency and Aristotelian deliberation, and still be a determinist? Key events from before we were born may propel our lives and actions, but that does not mean that they explain them. You do not have to go back to the Big Bang every time.”

Aristotle is rarely an undergraduate's first love – he can appear arid, his prose sometimes inelegant, and his social views unattractive. But Nielsen is drawn to his dry humour, his engaging spirit and his remarkable powers as an observer of human weakness – and of the human search for virtue.

“I am especially interested in Aristotle's account of practical reasoning and in good deliberation as a necessary precondition for virtue,” says Nielsen. “Human agency is crucial for Aristotle, and its possible relationship with scientific inquiry remains insufficiently explored.”

On this, at least, Aristotle might have agreed.

BUILDING UP, OUT AND AHEAD: A YEAR OF GROWTH AT SOMERVILLE

History, refurbishment and innovation have all received due attention over the past year at Somerville. Your donations have played a huge part in making this possible, and naming opportunities remain. For more information please email sara.kalim@some.ox.ac.uk.

Breaking New Ground

Subtitled A History of Somerville as seen through its buildings, Breaking New Ground was published in autumn 2013. It tells the story of a College that has always looked to expand and improve its facilities so that it can continue to support its core business of education & research, and provide the best possible experience for its students. How these imperatives are achieved changes continually, and calls for the College to explore new directions. New developments at Somerville have always combined sympathy for the past with architectural innovation. The College's 2013 building works reflect this need for adaptability.

Queen of the quad

The restored College Library was unveiled in October ready for the new academic year. Somerville is blessed with an exceptional library, both in terms of the elegant 1903 loggia design, and in terms of its stock levels (120,000 items at last count), which rival any College library in the University. Women students at Oxford were not always as welcome at the Bodleian as they are today, and it was partly with this in mind that Somerville erected the first purpose-built library of any women's college in Oxford, following a design by architect Sir Basil Champneys. The stone-and-brick Library frontage is a feature of the quad – and can now be seen in its full glory.

Somerville specials

Somerville's 1967 Wolfson building, on the other hand, is resolutely modern, its box-windows and glass-and-wood ground floor offering a sympathetic foil to the more traditional styles that flank it – “Wrenaissance” Penrose and neo-Elizabethan Park. Its front room has been named the Brittain-Williams room after two of our most remarkable alumnae, the late Vera Brittain, feminist and pacifist best-known for her writing on World War One, and her daughter Baroness Shirley Williams, a former Labour Secretary of State for Education, and one of the founders of the Liberal Democrats.

The Crowded 60s

Vaughan, completed in 1966, uses concrete grids to repeat the box motif that appears at intervals around the main quad. Rarely admired from the outside, it is popular with its first-year student residents, who find it welcoming and sociable. The Terrace, a new bar, café and social hub, sits neatly between undergraduate and graduate accommodation, thereby offering a shared space. With a glass ceiling and three glass walls, the bar looks over the concrete terrace at the southern edge of the College, offering seating for all seasons.

Observing the future

The two sleek Radcliffe Observatory Quarter (ROQ) buildings that flank the north side of Somerville, completed in 2011, overlook the site of the University's principal development, home to the new Mathematics Institute and (before long) the Blavatnik School of Government. The ROQ buildings have won four awards for architect Niall McLaughlin. Work is due to begin soon on the new Oxford India Centre too, which will house the Indira Gandhi Centre for Sustainable Development. Somerville has already welcomed its first batch of Indian postgraduate scholars in October this year, but the construction of the new building will place Somerville firmly at the centre of both Indian and sustainable development studies in Oxford.

Joanna Demaree-Cotton (2010, Psychology & Philosophy) returned to Somerville in the autumn to graduate - and to make calls to alumni for our annual Telethon

“Initially I felt doubtful about donating to an Oxford college but the Telethon rekindled the sense of Somerville being “family” and I was able to target my small donations towards bursaries for students who need financial support”

Somerville alumna Elizabeth Jones

MAKING A DIFFERENCE YEAR-ON-YEAR: THE ANNUAL FUND

Somerville's Annual Fund enables the College to target three core needs: teaching, student support and buildings.

Gifts to the Annual Fund enable the College to maintain its academic excellence in the context of its key values of independence, equal opportunity in education, and academic openness and innovation. In essence, the Annual Fund underpins the services that make Somerville a world-class educational institution.

The Annual Fund changes life for students at Somerville today in many different ways and helps the College to provide a truly transformative experience. One of the aspects of Somerville that is very highly rated is the library – in a recent student satisfaction survey, it was rated the best College Library in Oxford. Visitors to the College over the summer will have noticed that the library was covered in scaffolding as extensive works were undertaken to clean and repair the brick and stonework and also to replace the 110-year old roof tiles. Since the library is a listed building, the College was required to replace the tiles with as close a match as possible, which led to suitable tiles being sourced from a particular quarry in India. This work was enabled by donations to the Annual Fund. One of the first Oxford libraries to be built with students in mind can therefore remain a peaceful place to study for future generations of students.

In order for admission to Somerville to remain affordable for all, the Annual Fund continues to support bursaries. The College currently provides support to around 30% of our undergraduates for countering hardship and assisting with living costs. This figure places Somerville among the top six Oxford colleges for student support. The cost of this support is approximately £110,000 per year and this provision would not be possible without the many donors who contribute to the Annual Fund.

The 2012 telethon raised a fantastic £165,000 over two weeks. Student callers spoke with over 800 Somervillians of whom an amazing 57.45% decided to make a donation, an increase on previous years.

Although it fell just after the financial year this publication is reporting, this article cannot end without at least mentioning the 2013 Telethon. Initial indications are that the participation rate has increased still further, but we will be reporting on this next year. A fortnight of phone calls from current students to alumni meant that many relationships between Somerville and its alumni were strengthened or, in some cases, forged afresh after several years without contact.

TREASURER'S REPORT: ANDREW PARKER

Somerville's profile within the University continues to grow.

The Radcliffe Observatory Quarter immediately adjacent to the College continues to be developed, the Maths Institute has just been completed and opened, and work on the new Blavatnik Centre is well under way. There is a sense that the wider University's centre of gravity is moving more towards north Oxford, and thus to Somerville's own neighbourhood.

Geography aside, Somerville's profile within the University and beyond continues to grow. The Global Ocean Commission, which Somerville is hosting through to November 2014, is an exceptionally high-profile organisation (co-chairs include David Miliband) which will report its findings to the UN next year. Meanwhile, the first three post graduate students within the Indira Gandhi Centre for Sustainable Development (with funding from the Government of India matched by the University) have been appointed. Perhaps most significantly the Margaret Thatcher Scholarship Trust has the potential to transform the College's ability to provide significant and transformative support to Fellows, undergraduates and postgraduates alike.

Our numbers are on an even keel, even if we remain modestly endowed compared to some Oxbridge Colleges. The accounts for 2012.13 have just been audited and have been approved by Governing Body. They show a surplus on our unrestricted funds of £375k (boosted by a surplus on disposal of a residential property of £774k) and a surplus on restricted funds of £495k. The net capital gain on our endowments and investments was £5.4m (20%), which pushed our overall endowments up to £47m. Unspent restricted funds stood at £2.9m at the year end. We plan to use some of these funds in a coherent and planned way, as part of our emerging five year strategy, to provide much needed support to our Fellowship, to support our dual commitment to research and the highest quality teaching, and to provide further support to our undergraduate and graduate student communities in the on-going pursuit of academic excellence.

Financially there are a couple of other things we did during the year which are worth noting. We took advantage of the current economic situation to fix the interest on £8m of our £10m loan for ten years at an attractive rate, and we have set aside a sinking fund within our endowment that, all being well, will provide the capital to repay the loan in 30 years' time.

Looking forward, our unrestricted funds continue to be under some pressure following ten years of intensive capital expenditure and we need to get to a position whereby they at least break even without recourse to selling property. We plan to do that by boosting our conference and bed & breakfast income beyond the £1m mark, made possible in part by the quality of the en suite accommodation in our new ROQ accommodation blocks, the Flora Anderson Hall extension and our new Terrace café bar, and by refocusing our fundraising on the Annual Fund so that it delivers at a level sufficient to cover our core activities. Part of this was the recent Telethon, which has been a great success, reaching £192,985.30 (including £20,000 in matched giving) in predominantly unrestricted gifts, which are invaluable to us.

“There is a sense that the wider University's centre of gravity is moving more towards north Oxford, and thus to Somerville's own neighbourhood”

After ten years of intensive investment mentioned above, ably lead by Helen Morton, my predecessor as Treasurer, our infrastructure is in good shape. This summer we added to that by building The Terrace, our new café bar around the back of Vaughan. Our aspiration is that it will become the social hub for the whole College community. Initial indications are good – the Terrace took £3,000 in its first week, whereas the previous JCR bar which it replaced used to take £11,000 – £12,000 in a whole year. We also replaced the library roof after 110 years and took the opportunity to clean the stone and brick façade. It now looks magnificent. Less glamorous but still important was the replacement of the boilers in Wolfson and Margery Fry.

Please continue to support us. We have very significant and exciting plans for the next stage in Somerville's remarkable journey.

TOTAL GIVING FOR 2012-2013 WAS £1.71 MILLION

Somervillians have generously supported our efforts to endow our fellows and students. Our challenge is to increase unrestricted income to meet core commitments. The accounts below include only unrestricted income and expenditure.

Funding sources in 2012-13
Fees & academic income	£2,626,000
Charges (Student Rents & Catering)	£1,505,000
Charges (non student rents & catering)	£331,000
Investment Income & Interest	£698,000
Unrestricted Donations & Legacies*	£231,000*
Conferences & Trading	£1,167,000
Other	£53,000
Total income	£6,611,000

Expenditure in 2012-13
Academic tuition & research	£2,206,000
Catering, Domestic & Conferences	£2,700,000
Maintenance of premises	£1,791,000
Alumni relations and development	£645,000
Property sales surplus	-£774,000
Total expenditure	£6,568,000

*This accounts for all unrestricted gifts, which go into the College's general fund. The total income for restricted and unrestricted legacies and donations was £1.71 million in 2012-13.
