RESEARCH OVERVIEW

My work as a scientist has been extremely interdisciplinary and strongly collaborative: in my work on granular physics, I drew heavily on the literature of civil and chemical engineering. In the recent past, I've used the methods of theoretical physics to work on problems in neuroscience (long- and short-term memory), biology (the role of gap junctions in the onset of diabetes, and stochasticity in the visual system of the fruitfly) and computer science (the use of landscapes in optimisation problems). Most recently, I have been working on the mathematical modelling of speech perception in the presence of mishearings, as well as on the evolution of linguistic forms, in my current embedding at the Faculty of Linguistics in Oxford.

RELEVANT EXPERIENCE

I've studied, lived and worked in the UK, the US and India. I've also travelled widely through Asia, North and South America and Europe for professional as well as personal reasons. These travels, as well as my being part of the Rhodes and Radcliffe Fellowships, have brought with them wide professional and personal networks.

I've reviewed grant applications for organisations such as the National Science Foundation (US), Office of Naval Research (US), Department of Energy (US), the European Research Council, and the US-Israel Binational Foundation. I've organized international conferences such as 'Challenges in Granular Physics' (Trieste 2001) and interdisciplinary conferences such as 'The Anatomy of Laughter' (Oxford 2001).

SUPERVISION AND MENTORING

My work as a teaching assistant at Cornell University incorporated all the duties of a tutor at Oxbridge colleges, including lecturing, conducting tutorials of various sizes, having office hours for students, examining and marking. This role also included dealing with disciplinary issues as well as being sensitive to the physical and mental health of my students, and was my first experience of the pastoral care required of a tutor. I was subsequently based in a pure research institute in Calcutta for much of my career, where there was no student intake to begin with. Although I did indeed supervise graduate students when they eventually became available at my institution, my keenness to supervise enthusiastic undergraduates led me to supervise, pro bono, the summer projects of undergraduates from all over India. My approachability also led to me being the go-to person for the graduate students in all my international research collaborations and I also had the privilege of mentoring, and collaborating with, some very gifted postdocs within and outside my research group.

A list of my supervisees follows, with the places in parentheses referring to where the student/postdoc was based during the collaboration.

OTHER SKILLS

Languages

I speak English, French (I have a Diplôme de Langue Française from the Alliance Française de Paris) Bengali, Hindi and Gujarati with native fluency, can get by in Italian and have some basic Spanish.

Journalism

I have a portfolio of about a hundred articles in the popular press ranging from book and music reviews, to articles on education, travel and popular science; the venues include The Indian Express, The Telegraph Calcutta, The Times of India, The Statesman, The Hindustan Times, The Asian Age, The Hindu, The Economic and Political Weekly, Physics Today and The Times Higher Educational Supplement. I attach links to some representative work:

Creative Writing

I have written several short stories, an allegorical play on the world of science, and am working on two novels. The last of these was written at Harvard's Radcliffe Institute of Advanced Study as part of my brief there, and I was awarded a book completion grant from the Fondation Ferthé on the basis of its first draft.

Music

An Associate (ATCL) and Licentiate (LTCL) of the Trinity College of London in pianoforte performance, I also hold a Licentiate diploma of the Royal School of Music (LRSM), also in pianoforte performance. I've given public performances, although less and less as my scientific career progressed; a particularly happy association was with the Cambridge University Musical Society when I lived there. I've been the Western classical music critic for The Telegraph, The Statesman, The Hindustan Times and The Asian Age in Calcutta and am currently writing for India's first western classical music portal, <http://serenademagazine.com>. I've also conducted courses of western classical music appreciation at the Goethe Institute, Seagull Arts and Media Centre, Calcutta School of Music, C3 School of Music, and the Satyajit Ray Film and Television Institute, Calcutta. I have also trained in Indian classical music.
